

CHARGED WITH TRAIN WRECKING

Two Accused Austrians Are Said to Have Been Prompted by Revenge.

FREIGHT CARS ARE DITCHED

SLOW SPEED OF TRAIN AVERTS
DISASTROUS WRECK.

Attempted train wrecking is the charge against John Cocholich and M. Golovich, two Austrians, who were locked in the county jail yesterday by Deputy Sheriff Emery. It is alleged that the two men, in a fit of rage because they had been discharged from the force of the freight train wrecked on the Oregon Short Line depot site, tried to wreck freight train No. 56 about noon on last Monday in the north yards of the Oregon Short Line near Superior addition.

The complaint against the two men was sworn to by Joseph Jones, an Oregon Short Line detective, who claims that they have been positively identified as the would-be train wreckers. If the Austrians are convicted they can receive from six months in jail to ten years in the penitentiary.

It was through two women that the alleged train wreckers were captured. Mrs. J. B. Palmer and Mrs. J. E. Palmer, Jr., who live near the Oregon Short Line tracks, state that on last Monday they saw two Austrians standing at a switch on train No. 56 coming in. The locomotive, No. 249, passed the switch, and the tender and one coal car also rolled by. Just after the front wheels of the second coal car had passed the switch, the women say, the Austrians turned the switch. The rear wheels of the car, of course, rolled onto the track of a siding, while the front wheels remained on the main line. A moment later three coal cars were ditched. The Austrians who had caused the trouble ran away.

Slow Speed Saves Train. It was fortunate that the train was moving at a slow rate of speed. Had it been going faster there would probably have been a disastrous wreck, and probably some loss of life.

The astonished women informed the train crew of what they had seen, and Detective Jones was set at work upon the case. Before he found the right men he arrested eleven Greeks and Austrians and took them before the women. Yesterday he found Golovich and Cocholich wandering about the railroad yards and took them into custody. He claims that they have been positively identified by the two women as the men who turned the switch.

The two Austrians were some time ago employed by the railroad company at the new depot site, but were discharged so that men with families could be given work.

Spring Hats

The Merry Widow is to dominate the fashion of the season, even although the play itself has not yet made its way this far west. The embodiment of the Merry Widow herself has come in several forms, and that's more to the purpose. She may be found in at least two of the season's new hats, one of the most fetching of gowns and a sell or two. She will have to be sought at the millinery openings tomorrow.

Strange to say, two of the most successful plays of the year, "The Merry Widow" and "The Soul Kiss," are to have more of an effect on fashions than has been the custom in the past, even in these days when the stage dresses most of the fashions, anyway. If money talks, certainly it has made a loud enough sound in the money scene of Monte Carlo scene of "The Soul Kiss" to make the ordinary mortal doubt all statements of financial stringency. And the reflection is seen in even the colors of the gowns worn in both the plays; the golden touch which in fashion's parlance is called gold blonde.

Season of Riotous Color.

That the season just opening is to be one of riotous color, of unheard-of extravagance, of flashy, startling effects, these are the words of the milliners. The local shops will show any one that the milliners and those who go down to the great fashion centers in railroad trains and the like are not content with the enlargements and extensions already made in the older concerns, new and exclusive places are opening up where the latest Paris creations and the most bizarre effects of New York may be seen at first hand.

Most of the millinery wares will be on display tomorrow morning, and before the day is over literally hundreds of the newest and most amazing styles will have found their way to the homes of Salt Lake women. There will be no waiting for Easter to display the new headgear this year, for Easter will be too late in the calendar for a first wearing of a spring hat. Indeed, not a few of the ultra elite are already appearing in their spring hats, and before the week ends there will be many more to be seen.

Spring Hats Are Wonderful.

The hat of the spring time is always the crowning feature of a woman's dress, and so with it the fashion maker begins her crusade. The hats are wonderful in their effect than ever. Some of the dash is no doubt due to the fact that for at least a few weeks in the spring they will be worn with the strictly tailored gowns, and in themselves are a dash of color in order to be becoming. They range in size from the very tiniest turbans to immense cartwheel size (not shape) of the Merry Widow sailor. This particular hat is a marvel to behold, and yet it is becoming to almost any face above which it may be placed. It is a sailor, but so altered as to defy detection. Its width is twenty-two inches, and its depth from front to back is eighteen. Instead of the flat, smooth surface of the sailor as it formerly existed, it has piled high on its crown three patchwork squares of contrasting straw, while rising high to one side is a great cluster of wings suggestive of a huge bird. This sailor is to be found in all colors, and will prove one of the most effective street hats for the season.

The Merry Widow Hat.

A rapid change from the sailor style takes one to the Merry Widow hat proper, a huge Gainsborough effect in white, made up of one side and literally crowned with great masses of pink roses. Of all picture hats this is the queen. No description could do more than suggest its beauty.

Distinctive Models.

A Russian turban, which may sound cold for spring openings, is a thing but that, is of fine golden blonde straw, with a huge crown and close-fitting brim. Across the front is a smart buckle of wondrous workmanship, and from behind this arise in great sweeping folds two bird-like radiance agrettes, falling to either side of the face.

A Virol model in white is a great picture hat of Milan straw, with great plumes to one side and the other, while nestling just over the rolling brim is a dash of the new cerise, which color, indeed, is found in more than half of the most chic styles in either black or white. Another gorgeous Milan hat is on the Goerge style of tan, with a simple but most artistic coil of golden yellow around the crown, with just a dash of black. A tall black agrette reaches to perhaps a dozen inches above the hat makes of this hat, simple otherwise, a distinctive creation. An immense hat of white lace with gold threads running through it is almost hidden under a shower of pink wistaria falling in sweeping profusion around it. From the very midst of these flowers just above the face rises a great pink cabbage rose.

One of the Most Stunning.

Another Goerge model style is of fine Milan straw in bright grass green, from the side of which rises a great bunch of wavy black plumes. Over the crown and brim of the hat is a loose fold of black cove net. This is one of the most "stunning" creations to be seen in the local shops. Nor is the Merry Widow sailor the only sailor which belies its name. Gibson still had his own effect on the fashions, and a Gibson sailor measuring eighteen inches in diameter, and crowned with all sorts of elaborate trimmings, is one of the season's new hats. One of these is practically covered with a wealth of bright yellow buttercups, and tying these in a loose bow is a great fold of yellow tulle. Black net hats in a similar shape are not called by any special name, but they are on the sailor order, and the crowns are masses of black net or

No Suggestion of Financial Stringency in Elaborate Shapes, Startling Designs and Gorgeous Colors.

Some Amazing Creations.

Another strangely-formed turban is the motif, whose round bee hive shaped crown is like Utah's emblem. Rising from the front of this queer-looking hat is a great white Heron agrette, costing in itself as much as many moderate priced hats.

Another amazing creation is a Napoleon hat of cerise chrysanthemum braid. This is in the real Napoleon shape, wide across the head, and shows a sweeping cerise agrette falling away to one side. One of the decidedly novel effects is the nightcap hat, which wonderful effect is obtained by attaching a deep frill of lace to the inner edge of the hat and allowing it to fall over the back of the head. Needless to say, only the youngest and fairest will essay such a style.

A high-crowned Gainsborough, with the regulation side roll to the brim, has two heavy collars of cerise satin shirred surrounding its crown, while from one side rises a great bunch of coque feathers of the same color. Great black cabochons and touches of black lace finish it. Another of the new hats is encircled by a thick band of coral or cerise colored hyacinths, while a bunch of feathers in the same color rise from one side. Another striking one is a large black hat fairly surrounded with a wealth of foliage studded with great red poinsettias, while at one side two bunches of wheat are stiffly fastened.

Neat and Dainty Types.

All these are on the extreme order, the unusual, the bizarre. But of the neat striking, dainty, every day hats there is no end. Of every style and shape, of every color and combination of colors are they, and they are more bewitching than ever before. Tiny turbans of straw with close-fitting wings for traveling, wider hats of stitched silk so light in weight that anyone might wear one, wide sailors with only ribbon braid, or cleverly arranged hats for the woman of one hat which will serve for all ordinary occasions.

PASSING OF JAMES HOGLE, A WESTERN CHARACTER, FRIEND OF MARCUS DALY

Dean Benjamin Brewster, of St. Mark's Episcopal church, will conduct the services at the funeral of late James Hogle, which will take place Monday afternoon from the Hogle residence, 376 East Brigham street. The announcement of Mr. Hogle's death yesterday morning was the cause of widespread sorrow among his numerous friends in Salt Lake and in the surrounding country. Mr. Hogle was widely known in the intermountain region and up to his retirement four years ago his place at Main street was a gathering point for all of the men of note passing through the city. There were hundreds of successful mining men, promoters, financiers and commercial travelers who would not have thought a visit to Salt Lake complete without a chat with James Hogle.

Attacked by Gold Fever.

Mr. Hogle was born at Armagh, Ireland, Oct. 1838. When he was nearly 6 years old his parents moved to Canada, making their home near Quebec. Mr. Hogle attended school there until he was 14 or 15 years old, and then went to Illinois with his parents. There he lived until the spring of 1859, when he was seized with the gold fever and joined the rush to Pike's Peak. He was then 20 years old. He was a member of a large party that started from Illinois. Most of his companions grew tired of the hardships of travel before they reached Pike's Peak, but Hogle resolutely kept on, driving a yoke of oxen and a mule to the wagon in which he carried his worldly goods. With him were two men of the original party, whom he helped along the way. These three were all that remained of the Illinois band when they reached Pike's Peak. At that time Denver was merely a cluster of roughly built houses. No one living there had any idea that the little settlement was the beginning of a great city.

Four Years in Denver.

Because he was able to speak French, having learned the language at the school at Quebec, Mr. Hogle was taken into the home of a French family living in Denver and was soon looked upon as a member of the family. During the four years he lived in Denver he became acquainted with many of the men of note passing through the city.

sions, are shown in sufficient variety to suit all tastes. And, like the hats, a wider variety of suits and suitings than ever before is to be found in Salt Lake's shops.

Showy Season for Gowns.

In the main, the season will be a showy one in gowns as well as hats, but there will be many of the modest cloth suits of plain figured patterns worn well into the summer weather, the gay hats being used to brighten the costume. The materials vary, but the rajah and mirage silks will be in the lead for spring street suitings, while for dress occasions satin has never held the prestige it does today. Gowns in the exclusive shops are made of it. Waists for fancy wear are built on it, even where they seem to be entirely of lace.

In the theater of waists, the fine lingerie kind will hold their own through this coming summer, it seems, despite the lace and satin on the one hand and the strictly tailored-made waist on the other. The last mentioned is due for a big run from this time on, as the supply in the local shops has been taken almost as rapidly as it has arrived. The simpler styles of wash waists are all trimmed with fancy patterns and some have even the jay effect in plain linen or the material of which the waist is constructed.

Plaited Skirt Popular.

The plaited skirt is still at the front, with no indication of a return to the tighter style of a year or so ago. The jumper suit is still in the lead, and will remain in one form or another indefinitely. Another of the new fashions is a simply an exaggerated form of a jumper suit with fanciful sleeves and a wonderful scroll work around the top of the bodice.

The colors to be worn are not limited to the old-fashioned rainbow effects. They are infinite in variety. Blue in all its shades, with goblin leading, is about the choice, but gray with its tones of blue as well will be a favorite. Spring colors, too, are referred to, of which all the gowns in one scene of "The Soul Kiss" are made, is one of the leading shades, and if not a part of the costume, it must be made a part by being introduced somewhere, if only in shoes.

Tan shoes—and this includes all yellow shades as well—are to be worn for dressiest occasions. But white is a close second to the tan. In these high shoes white is substituted for the dark of half or low shoes of former seasons.

He was in Denver he acted as bookkeeper for a mercantile establishment. In 1893 the gold fever again seized him and then to the gold placer grounds of Montana and he started for Virginia City, Mont., where he did some mining in Alder Gulch.

He came to Salt Lake for the first time in 1894, wintering here that year, and in the spring of 1895 going to Helena, Mont., where he did some mining. The next year he came to Salt Lake and in 1897 he came to Salt Lake determined to make the city his permanent home. There he formed a partnership with James T. Clabey.

He was married to Miss Ida Elizabeth King of Salt Lake in 1893. After a few years had passed Mr. Hogle disposed of his interest in the business with Clabey and with his brother, Owen Hogle, opened the place at 174 Main street. There he built up a profitable liquor business.

Late in the '90s Marcus Daly, the Montana millionaire, urged Mr. Hogle to move to Butte, Mont., to back him in business enterprises there. Mr. Hogle refused to leave Salt Lake.

Close Friend of Daly.

Daly and Hogle were warm friends. They were acquainted before fortune had smiled upon either of them. When Daly came to Salt Lake he was employed by Walker Brothers and was sent by them to Montana, where he made his millions. Hogle was a large party that started from Illinois. Most of his companions grew tired of the hardships of travel before they reached Pike's Peak, but Hogle resolutely kept on, driving a yoke of oxen and a mule to the wagon in which he carried his worldly goods. With him were two men of the original party, whom he helped along the way. These three were all that remained of the Illinois band when they reached Pike's Peak. At that time Denver was merely a cluster of roughly built houses. No one living there had any idea that the little settlement was the beginning of a great city.

After his retirement from business he gradually placed his other interests into younger hands and during the two years preceding his death spent his time in travel and recreation.

Mr. Hogle leaves a widow and one son, James A. Hogle.

USES HORSESHOE TO HANG HIMSELF

John Elits Attaches Belt to Good Luck Omen Over His Door.

ALIVE WHEN CUT DOWN

DIES WHILE POLICE ARE WORKING OVER HIM.

Had the police been notified a moment sooner that John Elits, a German dishwasher, was hanging in his room in the rear of 134 West Fourth South street, yesterday morning, the man's life might have been saved. When Sergeant Johnston and several policemen reached the place, they found Elits hanging with a belt about his neck from a horseshoe, which had been fastened above his door. He was quickly lowered to the floor. There was life still in his body, and Sergeant Johnston made an effort to fill the man's lungs with air. This failed. Elits died while the policemen were working over him. Elits was about 40 years old and was a heavy drinker. He was at one time employed at the Royal bakery and later at Franklin's, where he worked as a pot washer. He was discharged because of his weakness for drink. It is believed that the loss of his position threw him into a fit of despondency, deepened by the effects of alcohol.

Through some ironical humor, he tied the belt with which he strangled himself, to the horseshoe over his door. He had placed the horseshoe there on some happier day, hoping that it would bring him luck, but his weakness for drink prevented the coming of the bright days he hoped for, and he used the horseshoe to assist him into another world.

Elits was without money. It is said that he was forced to beg for drinks on Friday night. Yesterday morning, Mrs. J. A. Turnbull, from whom he rented the room, saw him stagger into his door, apparently deeply intoxicated. About 8:30 o'clock she went to his room to collect the rent that was due her. As he did not answer her knock, she pushed open the door and brushed against his body, swinging from the horseshoe overhead. The frightened woman ran out to summon help. It was some time before the police arrived and cut down the body. It was then too late to save the man's life.

Elits was a native of Oldenburg, Germany. He served three years in the German army before coming to this country.

RUSSELL'S WORK STOPPED

Check Passer Who Operated in Salt Lake Convicted at Mobile, Alabama.

H. Lee Russell, a noted swindler with a weakness for passing worthless checks and calling himself a Mason, has been arrested at Mobile, Ala., and is now serving a sentence of a year and a day there. Lee escaped trial on a charge of forgery by pleading to having obtained money by false pretenses.

Lee was in Salt Lake several months ago and succeeded in passing a number of bogus checks, one at the office of the Colorado Midland railroad for $47.50, another for about the same amount at a hotel, and others at saloons. After tarrying in Salt Lake for a few days, Russell went to Denver, where he got rid of other checks, nearly all of them being for $47.50.

The man has victimized so many Masons on his pretense that he belongs to that fraternal organization that a circular has been issued warning Masons everywhere to beware of him. The circular describes him as: "An impostor, short in stature, smooth face, quick movements, smooth, rapid and plausible talker; claims to be a member of the Mohammed temple, Peoria, Ill."

How Much Is That Spare Dollar Worth to You?

Just for the sake of illustration and to better get the point of this advertisement, take a dollar out of your pocket, give it a good square in the morning, and read the following paragraphs.

Spend it today and you can get 100 cents' worth of whatever you want.

You undoubtedly can get some pleasure in spending it today. You are young, healthy, strong, and hearty. A dollar more or less isn't much to you now. You can easily earn more.

But perhaps five years from now you will have a better use for that dollar than you have now. If you've spent it, it's gone. Bring it to this bank today and in five years hence it will have grown to $1.21. In a little less than eighteen years it will have doubled.

You alone must decide what you will do. Spend your surplus cash today and get 100 cents for every dollar; or put it in this bank, and when you are eighteen years older, not so strong and vigorous as you are now, and the morning of dollars isn't so easy, have 200 cents for every dollar you save now.
